Beyond Ministry

Legendary club night Beyond moves weekly to Ministry Of Sound

BEYOND

To the Ministry and Beyond!

The ultimate after-hours party, Beyond, is moving to a new home at the Ministry of Sound. Quite frankly, we can't think of a more perfect place for a brand that takes music selection so seriously.

We caught up with promoter Nadim Aoun to find out what's in store at the Ministryand Beyond!

So Nadim, what prompted the move to Ministry?

Well, as you may know we took over Ministry of Sound over Halloween last year for the first Beyond event and it was epic. We followed it up with two exponentially more successful events to the point where the club almost sold out over As One... an after hours! That's when we knew we were onto something special.

What have you got in store for us?

Besides an updated music policy, special guests and a huge investment in diversifying the entertainment we will also have crossover promoters guesting rooms on a weekly basis.

With Pride being the biggest night of the year, is there anything extra special planned?

The king of after-hours, Pagano is back for what will no doubt be THE event of the week. Also, the Baby Box will be hosted by Heir - this is an extremely cool brand that's done events at The Nest and XOYO - it will be insane!

Will anything change with the move to Ministry?

The opening time will change to 5:30am. There's no shame in waking up to come out for a Sunday boogie to this one! All I can say is the vibes we get at Beyond @ Ministry are SO positive, it's reminiscent of London circa '07! Good times

What are you looking forward to most about the future of Beyond?

The move to Ministry is just the start - lets put it that way. I can't tell you too much but expect our incredible London and international residents to get a whole lot more well-known on the international house music scene.

Five Things We Love About Beyond

1. It's probably the only afterparty you attend without feeling guilty:

No begging a friend to ask the host if it's ok, no limits on the mates who can come, no hovering around outside the club to see what everyone else is doing. Stroll up, check your coat and strut on in. What awaits is much better than any bedsit in Oval could hope to be.

2. The boys are, well, Beyond!

The man-candy pedigree in Beyond truly lives up to the name. From the onstage dancers gyrating in all manner of sexy costumes to the curiously cute clientele, it's no wonder your sunglasses are steaming up. Even if you ARE wearing them inside.

3. The music is even better

You don't get the Ministry's stamp of approval with a few ropey podcasts played off your mate's iPhone. This is world-class aural pleasure, with the biggest names in music serving you sonic sensations you won't hear anywhere else. From homegrown talent like Fat Tony and Sam DMS, to international stars like Mickey Friedmann, Gonzalo Rivas and more, it's the ultimate in musical magnificence.

4. It's more fun than Church on a Sunday morning

If we're given a choice between listening to the vicar's wife squawk her way through "All Things Bright and Beautiful" and rubbing up against a host of hunky men on a dance floor on a Sunday morning, well, we know what we're doing. Who needs the Kingdom of the Lord when we have the Ministry of Sound anyway? If we're all going to Hell because of it, then it looks set to be quite a party.

5. Nobody is going to hang around awkwardly afterward

There's nothing more uncomfortable than someone outstaying their welcome and after parties tend to be a breeding ground for blokes who just want to shore up on your couch and stay there for DAYS. But at Beyond, once the party's over, you're out the door, into a cab, looking fab and on your way. Where you go next though? Well, depends how good you looked on the dance floor, we're guessing.

Beyond is at Ministry of Sound (103 Gaunt Street, Elephant and Castle, SE1 6DP) every Sunday, 5.30am (Sunday morning)-late.

Pride Arts Festival

Next week is London's Pride Week! Kylie's going to be strutting around Hyde Park in hot pants (not just randomly, she is doing a gig there). And of course there's the Pride Parade, and a host of performers on the Trafalgar Square stage, including Blue and Sandy & Sandra from Gogglebox (!).

As well as all that, the Pride Arts Festival will hit London in a sparkling glitter cannon explosion of arresting artistry. With more than 25 events over the course of the week, at a host of venues across the city, it'll have more paint, sequins, impromptu performances and drama than a chillout at Ke$ha's house.

There's a fancy dress Sound of Music Sing-A-Long at L'Escargot (Camp with a capital "C"), a special screening of Pride (pictured) at Clapham Picturehouse, piano-crooning drag queen Vanity von Glow at the ambient Phoenix Artists Club, lesbian indie flick Magda's Lesbian Lover at Raindance Film Centre, and Ten One Night Stands (we can relate to that) which is a collection of art works portraying various brief trysts and fanciful flings.

There's more too; orchestral performances, introspective talks, family stuff with potato painting and things for kids, emotive plays, readings, debates and quizzes. Downing a Red Stripe and crunching through the rubble on Frith Street hand-in-hand with someone called Benji is all well and good, but sometimes it's nice to get a bit of culture at Pride, innit? Pride Arts Festival runs from 21st – 28th June at a selection of venues across London.

Parade

Of course the centrepiece of the Pride in London celebrations is the parade, which takes over the city in a defiant exhibition of equality. Very few things can succeed in making the busiest capital in Europe grind to a halt, but the parade achieves it, glow sticks, klaxons and all! The theme for this year is Pride Heroes, in homage to individuals who have gone above and beyond for the LGBT community in the last year. Think Ian McKellen riding in a chariot (that's chariot, not Chariots). In fact he usually makes an appearance at the parade, so that may not be far from the truth. There's even an award for the best pride hero costume, so dust off that Batman leotard. The parade leaves Baker Street at 1pm, finishing up at Whitehall at around 4:30pm.

Cabaret

The Pride Cabaret stage on Wardour Street will be playing host to all manner of dragtastic campery. Feather boas will be flung, songs will be sung, and sequins will be scattered as a salacious selection of entertainers exhibit their feminine (or in some cases masculine) wiles. Among the tantalising talent on offer will be celibate (pah!) sensation Virgin Extravaganzah, sparkling show pony Topsie Redfern (pictured) and the internationally ignored, unfashionably late, viciously vulgar Vanity von Glow. There will also be a selection of finalists from talent competition Pride's Got Talent, the final of which was filmed for ITV and judged by none other than Sinitta! Can't argue with that. Things kick off at 1pm and finish around 7pm.

Women's Stage

ULTIMATE Girl Power at the Women's stage this Pride; whether you're a lady-loving lady, a man-loving lady, a lady who used to be a man, or just a man who ended up there by accident, there's plenty of fun to be had! Example number one; there's a lesbian band The Dykeness! Their Facebook page describes their genre as "intergalactic feminist cock rock". HOW CAN YOU SAY NO TO THAT?! As well as that, there's dashing DJ Sandra Davenport (top), X Factor contestant Charley Monroe (below) and a special speech by Pride in London director Alison Camps (insert "camp" jokes here). The women's stage is located on Dean Street, with festivities starting at 1pm and wrapping up at 7:30pm.

Pride in the Park

Kick back after the weekend's madness with the chilled and salubrious (well, salubrious might be a stretch) Pride in the Park! It's a mini festival in its own right, with a kaleidoscopic rainbow of activities, performances, food and drink to enjoy throughout the day. A major part of the event will revolve around UK Black Pride, who are putting on a stellar line-up of stage acts and stalls. The celebration of African, Asian, Arab and Caribbean LGBT people is always of a formidable standard, and everyone is welcome. As well as that there's the presentation of the inaugural Pride in London Parade Awards. Pride in the Park will take place in Vauxhall Pleasure Gardens (not as sleazy as the name suggests) from 1pm.

A Decade of Black Pride

UK Black Pride will be celebrating its tenth festival this year. Chris Godfrey speaks with the carnival's director, Phyll Opoku-Gyimah, about why it's still such an important event in the LGBT calendar.

Hey Phyll, how is preparation going for UK Black Pride 2015?

You know what, it's always exciting because you get so many people from the community emailing saying they want to perform, they want to act, they want to do some spoken word, they want to volunteer. And this year we've had quite a number of lone people say they want to come but it'll be their first pride and they don't want to be by themselves.

So this is great! We've got them helping and staffing the stall for Stonewall, or working with St Mungo's just so their journey in terms of their very first pride is one that feels safe to them, where they don't feel isolated, and one where it's exciting and they can have a shared commonality with others who they wouldn't have necessarily met.

For someone who's never been before it will feel like a place they've been before because everybody is so welcoming, there's no drama, there's a lot of excitement, great food and drink (if they do drink) and entertainment in abundance. But importantly they have the feel of family where they won't feel lonely.

This year marks a decade from the first event, how have things changed?

Well, there will be more people for a start! There's more love and passion and drive for people to come together to come collectively to do more. We've noticed over the years more people have bought into the idea that there should be a space for BME people to celebrate their achievements and their friends. So let's get behind it and support it. Because we understand that solidarity is important. It's about learning and if we don't learn then we don't grow. And that's probably what will be the difference.

Why do you think there's been this surge in popularity?

When we first started people were like: 'oh my god, how bloody dare you have a black pride, that's really racist'. When clearly I can't be racist! But I think that where we've got the next generation coming up, they're really free to be who they want to be in comparison to the times when I was coming out.

There's more of a space for people to be out, without fear of major discrimination. Don't get me wrong I'm not being complacent, there's still a lot of discrimination that goes out on towards the LGBT community, but there's also a lot of homophobia and Islamophobia for people that carry those different intersections of who they are.

Speaking of which, what did you make of the recent research by FS Magazine which looked at prejudicial attitudes on the gay scene?

Well, I skim-read it but having spoken to some of the guys in our community they said it's true, it's out there. Some have said they've always had a good time when they've gone out and never had any problems. But I think that may be few and far between. I think a lot of BME men have experienced real stereotypes and stigmas around who they are. There's a reason why UK Black Pride exists, there's a reason why we have self organised groups that support BME gay men.

And if we didn't have those groups it would mean we're living in an ideal world. So there needs to be a space to talk about gay people who may be disabled, gay people who may be BME, or women BME who are suffering certain forms of discrimination out there. Even within our community where we claim to understand marginalisation.

We must never try to out-trump each other with our disadvantage within society at large. But it's important we bring our whole, true authentic self to the table when we talk about what we need and what our aspirations are. Maybe one day there won't be a need for a Black Pride, but until then we're going to continue growing and growing.

So how have you grown and what have you learnt in your time with UK Black Pride?

That I've aged! I think I've learnt that every individual is absolutely instrumental in making

UK Black Pride successful. I've learnt tonnes about the queer community, I've learnt that it's important that we have allies, that we're not talking to ourselves, that we're working side-by-side with our white brothers and sisters who in turn will help us challenge any form of racism and discrimination that affects different groups of people. I love looking around on the day when everyone's dancing, eating food, sharing space, networking or forming relationships, which will last for two minutes, two years or a lifetime. Last year on stage we had a rabbi, an imam, a Christian, an atheist and a Buddhist and they led the one-minute silence for all the people we had lost here and abroad due to LGBT discrimination. To see that on stage was powerful to me.

UK Black Pride is a free-entry event and will be held on Sunday 28th June in South London's Vauxhall Pleasure Gardens.

DOM TOP'S PRE-PRIDE PREPARATORY GUIDE TO AWFUL SOCIAL INTERACTIONS

Every year it's the same. Winter is awful. Spring is awful and wet and cold but everyone is really surprised, despite it being like that EVERY YEAR. Summer eventually rolls around and after weeks of white skies and middling temperatures, it finally starts to pick up a few days of warmth. Everyone heads to Topman for luridly coloured hot pants, drinks cider in Soho Square and next thing you know, it's Pride again.

Now Pride is, of course, a hugely important event for visibility, awareness, fostering a feeling of community and showing the world that London is a safe place for LGBTQ people.

HOWEVER. Pride is also a MINEFIELD of people you thought you'd never have to see again in your life. Every maggot you've ever met will be crawling out of the woodwork today and there's not a thing you can do to stop it. Here are some examples of the characters you may have the misfortune to meet and how to avoid such situations.

SHITE-RELATED EMBRRASSMENTS

Everyone's got one. Like the guy who's sink you blocked whilst trying to douche in the downstairs loo. You bolted from the house, ignored his texts and now he's standing directly opposite from you in a pair of white chinos and espadrilles, sipping a cherry VK and laughing to his mates. Probably about the boy who left chunks of faeces on his facial cleanser.

PRIDE PRO-TIP:
Don't douche in sinks. They are not equipped for heavier waste and are also not very accommodating.

THAT GIRL FROM WORK

Another person you will almost undoubtedly run into at a Pride event is that girl from work. That girl from work is alright when you're both stuck folding down merino wool jumpers at closedown. She's alright on the staff night out when she says she watches Bad Girls Club too. She is not alright when she bowls up to you amid the crushed cups of Old Compton street and declares you to be her gay best friend, introduces you to her fifteen other girlfriends all wearing a selection of shutter shades and whistles, then follows you around like a lost gosling for the rest of the night, getting you turned away from three after parties in the process.

PRIDE PRO-TIP: Go on the dole to avoid awkward interactions with future co-workers. The dole is actually really great. It's like being on a self-catering holiday to Bognor. Forever.

THE CRUSH

Of course, Pride wouldn't be complete without a cameo from the current object of your affection. This will always coincide with the desperately inebriated moment in which you realise you haven't fully pulled your penis free of your jeans and have somehow managed to sluice a thick, wet, steaming streak of urine down your leg at the Soho Square Port-a-Potties. This will, in turn, lead you to douse yourself with the remainder of your nice, warm can of Carling and then claim to your potential beau that you were pushed by a vicious Muscle Mary. Sadly, the unmistakable odour of hot ammonia rising from your crotch belies the truth. Looks like there's not going to be a post-Pride cheeky Nandos for two. For you at least.

PRIDE PRO-TIP: Nandos serve chicken. But they also sell soft drinks.

EXES

Then there are the exes. Because of course the best thing that could happen while you're drunkenly swaying around like an ear of corn in the wind to 'Born This Way', is to run into the person who told you they'd love you forever and then proceeded to fingerbang twinks at every chillout within the city limits. How wonderful it is to politely say hello, then start "reminiscing", then start picking open old scabs, before furiously hurling your beaker of party punch right into their SMUG VENEER-FILLED FACE YOU CHEATING SCUM.

PRIDE PRO-TIP: Six gay men a year break a finger during unsupervised fingerbang sessions. Always tell a friend what you are doing and have them accompany you to the fingerbang.

Accept it, understand it, acknowledge it: one, some or all of these things can and will happen to you at Pride this year. Prepare yourself accordingly and perhaps you'll manage to avoid some of the crushing embarrassment. Best of luck.

Eurocreme's Kayden & Kamyk Swim into Prowler

To celebrate the launch of Eurocreme's latest title, Swimboy, the deliciously delectable Kayden Gray (left) and Kamyk Walker (right) will be making an exclusive in-store appearance at Prowler Soho, on Saturday. Kayden and Kamyk are two stars of the film, which follows the journey of a troubled young Jonathan at the elite Lakeside swimming academy. Both will be signing copies of the DVD in-store, whilst showing exactly why they have become two of the hottest porn stars around.

Clonezone

Clonezone will be marching in London's Pride Parade this year, with that ridiculously hot specimen Alex Minsky joining as the team's #PrideHero. The ex-marine and dangerously good-looking model will also be meeting people in Clonezone Soho for a few hours after the parade. So try not to get too drunk and make a tit of yourself.

In the meantime Clonezone will be selling Pride themed t-shirts (£19.99), tank tops (17.99) and bags (£12.99), with a percentage of all sales going straight to the Pride team to support the parade and charities. It's all responsibly sourced and all that jazz, and they're available to buy in-store or online.

London Gay Symphony Orchestra Summer Concert

As a classy finale to this year's Pride Festival, the London Gay Symphony Orchestra (LGSO) will present a post-parade classical-chillout (not that kind). The performance will be easing in gently with Respighi's Ancient Airs and Dances, based on renaissance lute pieces, followed swiftly but smoothly by Glière's Horn Concerto, in which the orchestra's own Emily Gorlin takes the solo, then continuing their Brahms cycle and ending happily with his Third Symphony.

The LGSO is the UK's oldest LGBT Orchestra and one of only a handful in the world. Founded in 1996, the troupe has worked diligently over the last eighteen years at national venues, including the Royal Festival Hall. They've also toured internationally in cities like Paris and Zagreb, performed with Jimmy Somerville, recorded a score for the cult film Pervirella, and raised thousands for charities including Amnesty International, Crusaid and Albert Kennedy Trust along the way.

Marlon Takes Pride of Place at Prowler

Marlon Kameka may not be a name you instantly recognise, but this talented actor, dancer, choreographer, director and model will most definitely be familiar to many in London. Showing his cheeky side, Marlon will be appearing exclusively at Prowler Soho, as part of the store's Pride London celebrations. Marlon will be modelling underwear and swimwear while there, so what better way to get in the spirit of Pride than by shamelessly perving on him.

Ruby Rose at Brighton Pride

Ruby Rose, the multi-talented actress, model, DJ, producer, campaigner, and presenter, is set to headline the Girl's Dance Tent at Brighton Pride Festival this year. And she's pretty darn excited about it.

"It is my first time in Brighton and I am stoked!" said Ruby. "I love the UK. When DJing I jump about a lot and I'm pretty goofy but the music is always good. The love at Pride events is palpable and I always want to connect to my brothers and sisters.

"We should always be grateful with how far we have come because of those of us who have fought the fight to get us to today, but we are far from finished. We need to eradicate violence towards the global LGBT+ community, and guarantee access to health and housing. LGBT+ rights should be our human rights."

Mother Black Cap's Revenge

Squatters reopened Camden's beloved Black Cap last Saturday, bringing one last eclectic night of performances to its historic stage. Dubbed as unofficial, unsanctioned and unapproved, Chris Godfrey spoke with the event's organisers and carousers.

In an act of delicious insubordination, the Black Cap welcomed patrons once again last Saturday night, as squatters occupying the building briefly reopened the pub for business. A colossal middle finger to property developers, private landlords and an increasingly beige London, it was a night of queer cabaret and anarchist poetry, celebration and defiance - all brought to you by the Camden Queer Punx. No corporate sponsorship necessary.

For over a week now the dozen or so strong group have been occupying the space, hoping their presence will help publicise the venue's struggle and apply pressure on those responsible for its current demise.

"We're just locals living in the area and identify as queer and punk," says George, one of the squatters occupying the building. "We figure this is two parts of Camden which are getting eroded by the gentrification of the area. There's a real need, an urgent need, for spaces not only to live but to use as community hubs as well.

"There are examples of these kind of occupations helping to reopen places. The hope is we're generating a lot of press attention and then reinvigorating the campaign through occupying, which brings more pressure on the developers and Camden council to maintain it as an LGBT cabaret venue."

The Cap had already fallen into a state of disrepair by the time the squatters moved in. The lights had stopped working, many of the venue's fixtures had already been stripped, while black sacks lined the floor, filled with broken frames and indeterminate refuse leftover from the pub's hasty gutting.

But since last Monday, squatters and old patrons of the Cap worked together to pump new life into the old girl's veins, dragging it out of morbid darkness back into vivacious glory, ready for its envoi.

It was a valiant effort. Disco balls hung from the ceiling, red neon glow sticks lined the skirting and the now working again spotlight illuminated the stage. The floors were cleared, bar restocked and decorated, while two rainbow flags were proudly draped from the wall, flanking that of a London anti-fascist banner. Even the screens above the bar were brought back to life, playing the same ambiguous three-minute clip of Edward Dildohands on repeat.

The night, carefully 'advertised' through social media and word-of-mouth, attracted over a hundred revellers, most of them old patrons of the Cap, keen for one last soiree. "It's just nice to be back inside," says Karen. "We were here the Friday before it closed and we were gonna come on the Sunday...and then it was closed. Money before people I'm afraid isn't it. That's why we're here tonight: to support."

With the safety of the 200-year-old venue paramount, organisers kept the doors bolted to avoid overcrowding (and any unwanted drop-ins from the local constabulary). But even with this pseudo closed-door policy it was likely the most inclusive private party in London - just as you'd expect from the Cap.

"The last two years we'd been regular and being a tranny, point is, you're so welcome," says Louise, a regular since 1992. "I swear to God we haven't been welcome anywhere like this have we? I swear. Nowhere. You don't have to be gay you don't have to be lesbian. Everybody's welcome. And that's the Black Cap, that's what it's all about."

The show itself was as diverse as you'd expect from the Cap, with the usual mix of drag acts and cabaret, as well as performances from the BDSM community and spoken word artists. There was even room for a spate of anarchist poetry; it may not have been the Cap's traditional serving, but its raw aggression and cutting rhetoric aimed at the usual suspects – the 1%, exploitative developers, capitalism – resonated with the crowd, many still in a state of disbelief and despondency that the venue remains closed (legally, at least).

"What's most upsetting about it is we are losing queer history when these buildings go," says Jill, who'd been coming to the Cap since the eighties. "You still now get young queer people wanting to know queer history and these buildings hold queer history. I came here as a 20-year-old in the eighties and there were older gay people here, queer people, that gave me a sense of history and that I belong somewhere to a culture.

"I learnt a lot about my queer history from places like this and I think that's really important that you don't lose that, that young people that are coming into the queer nights. I think it's quite depressing. These are really important buildings."

The night drew to a close with a cabaret performance from Lucy McCormac and some naked crowd surfing. It was a fitting finale to a successful night, but the organisers are hoping that it won't be the last bout of nude flesh shamelessly displayed in the confines of the Cap.

"We would love for it to become a regular thing," says George of the Camden Queer Punx. "We have been served papers already, so we're already in the legal process, so it's unlikely we will be here much longer because the Bailiffs are on their way in a couple of weeks. But ideally, yes, we would love for it to become a regular thing and for people in the community to come down and use it.

"We're very keen to keep it to the community so we can protect our space and protect each other. We've had various offers of people wanting to put on plays that were set in the back cap, it was just very short notice for a lot of people but a lot of them have shown their support."

When the Camden Queer Punx are inevitably removed from the premises, the fabled pub will once again slip into darkness. But whether Saturday night was the first in a sequence of similar events, a defiant call-to-arms against its closure and catalyst for further action, or simply an epilogue in the venue's rich history, the Black Cap finally got the send off it deserved - one Mother Black Cap herself would have been proud of.

Just for Kicks

Stereo Kicks, the cutest musical mob since Buggy Malone, will be swarming the stage this weekend at G-A-Y. We caught up with mono-Kick Tom Mann to chat about X Factor judges, band best friends and why he'd avoid Sharon Osbourne!

Hey Tom! Tell me about the new single, 'Love Me So', you wrote it right?

Yeah, I wrote the song a while back, not necessarily with Stereo Kicks in mind but the boys really liked it. It's easier writing our own songs because I know what everyone in the group likes, so rather than having a song from the label that a couple of people need convincing on, you can write something that fits everyone's tastes.

That's quite a task with so many of you though! It must be like Cheaper By the Dozen, do you all travel around in a van?

At the start we had a minibus and it was horrific. It was just a mess. Now we have a sleeper bus and it's much easier. Even when it's chaotic though, I always say I'd much rather be doing this with a group of friends than by myself.

A lot of solo artists say that travelling by themselves is really lonely.

Yeah, I mean obviously you have your road managers and drivers but those are more professional relationships. With a band I've got loads of other guys to talk to.

Yeah, it's not even like a three-piece band where you'll be sick of each other in a week's time, you have quite a lot of friends to choose from.

Exactly, everybody's got their little groups within the band. Not in a bad way, it's just who you naturally connect with more, your best friends within the group. It's great. Even when they're all screaming and shouting, doing your head in, I'd still prefer this than being alone.

You guys were originally managed by Louis Walsh but you parted ways earlier this year. Tell me about that.

Well, technically we weren't managed by him, but he was our mentor through the show. That's really his only involvement. He took us through the shows and then that was it. Not much else.

So pretty hands off!

Pretty much. We already had a manager and we were doing our own thing.

You're playing G-A-Y this weekend and you've got a pretty big gay fanbase, how do you feel about that?

You know, we haven't had the chance to interact with them that much yet. But we pretty much love anyone who loves us, so they're great! We performed at G-A-Y before, just after we came off X-Factor. We're really looking forward to going back. It's a great energy and vibe.

The new X-Factor judging line-up was announced recently: Cheryl, Simon Cowell, Nick Grimshaw and Rita Ora. What do you think of that?

I think that's a pretty good line-up. Nick Grimshaw is the face of Radio One and Rita Ora was good on The Voice. Pretty fiery and opinionated. Obviously they're trying to revamp the show and go a bit younger. That should work.

Personally I will miss Mel B; her and Cheryl together was the best.

Yeah, where is Mel B? She was lovely to us. I feel like she just disappeared.

Let's play a quick game of SNOG, MARRY, AVOID.

You're going to get me into trouble!

Probably! Britney, Christina, Jessica Simpson?

Who do you choose out of that? I'd snog Christina, I've always had kind of a thing for her, marry Jessica Simpson and avoid Britney. I'm a pretty simple guy, I don't need that kind of hassle. Britney is drama.

Leona Lewis, Alexandra Burke or Rylan?

I love Rylan. I can't avoid him! I'd marry Rylan, snog Leona and avoid Alexandra Burke.

Cheryl Cole, Nicole Scherzinger, or Sharon Osbourne?

If I avoid Sharon she's gonna kill me.

She won't be happy. I've seen her chase people with buckets of water.

Oh my god. She is but...snog Nicole, marry Cheryl, avoid Sharon!

She'll be coming for you now.

Oh god! Sorry Sharon!

Even when it's chaotic though, I always says I'd much rather be doing this with a group of friends than by myself.

Tom Peters is fresh off the plane from Berlin and ready to bring YOU his super-edgy, super-deadly sound from the darkest depths of the German capital, to one of Vauxhall's most notorious super-clubs. Renowned in his home country, he's a promoter, producer, DJ and fashion artist (who isn't these days?), who's bringing his uniquely challenging sound to foreign shores. SH:24

The state-of-the-art new sexual health service that's hassle-free and free of charge.

With an efficient, no-nonsense approach to sexual health testing, this revolutionary new website is a much-needed resource in the gay community. SH:24 are a community interest company, working in partnership with the NHS, integrating their services to focus on giving people diagnoses as swiftly as possible, while acknowledging the all-important need for respect and discretion. And they are important factors to recognise. Fear of exposure as well as an unwillingness, or even embarrassment, to go and sort out the problem is a major cause of rising sexually transmitted infections in the UK. Us Brits are notoriously bad at going to the doctor.

SH:24 gets around this by allowing its users to send off for home testing kits for the four most common STI's; chlamydia, gonorrhoea, syphilis and HIV. It comes with a freepost envelope to send your samples back in, and there is no need to put your name or personal details on any post/samples you send back. If you have a positive result you get fast-tracked at a local sexual health clinic.

The website is entirely free of charge to residents of Lambeth and Southwark, two areas that have some of the highest rates of infection in the UK, and large populations of social groups statistically most likely to contract STIs; young people, gay men and BME communities.

As well as liaising with the NHS, SH:24 have collaborated with Lambeth and Southwark councils, who commission the service for their residents. SH:24 would like to expand the service to other parts of London and the country - If you don't live in Lambeth and Southwark but would like to access such a service - email info@sh24.org.uk so they can let other local authority commissioners know there is a demand for the service.

SH:24's Programme Director, Dr Gillian Holdsworth, said: "A third of people attending sexual health clinics could potentially self-manage using SH:24, thereby avoiding a clinic visit. We also know many people who want or need a test don't get tested for a number of reasons - inconvenience, embarrassment about going to a clinic, or not realising they're at risk. SH:24 aims to increase efficiency and improve the experience for users, as well as radically improving sexual health outcomes. It's available 24 hours a day, with confidentiality and results by text within a week guaranteed."

The service is now live at www.sh24.org.uk.

IBIZA PRIDE

08/07/15 - 12/07/15

Aviator shades. Check. Denim hotpants. Check. Half-drunk bottle of Sainsburys Basics rum. Check. Sense of irony. Check. That checklist could only be for two events...Ibiza Pride or Haggerston Pride. Haggerston doesn't have a pride (John Sizzle's ears prick up, Pritt Stick at the ready) so yes, you guessed it, it's IBIZA PRIDE.

The concept of Ibiza Pride is actually quite daunting. Can you IMAGINE. Ibiza's mad enough as it is without adding tens of thousands of gays to the mix. We never know when to stop (and we caaaaan't stop). It's going to be insane! And not just, like, "oh I got too drunk and woke up in a strange bed" insane. More like "WHY WAS PARIS HILTON AT THAT CHILLOUT?" insane. It'll be a lock-stock jock-strap helter-skelter glissade of biceps and bass, twinks and drinks, yachts and YAAAAS.

It's scheduled to run from 8-12 July and it's sponsored by Scruff and Facebook, with events, parties and happenings at world-famous venues like Space, Ushuala and Privilege. Rebeka Brown is performing (we love her, she's got a single called Big Bad Bitch #BBB - NEED WE SAY MORE?) along with infamous DJ's like Javier Gonzalez, Dandy and Elias.

As well as all THAT, there's a massive event called Animal Park on the 10th at Benimussa. It's sort of a cross between a zoo and a nightclub, complete with swimming pools, fountains, food stands and the "Seal Pit", which has actual seals in it. The Seal Pit is located just next to the Chill Out Zone. Would seals chill you out or just make you more jittery? They're quite calming actually aren't they.

Anyway the whole thing is going to be too much fun. You deserve it, quite frankly.

G-A-Y Porn Idol with Alyssa Edwards

Words and Photos by Chris Jepson

Alyssa Edwards, the original pageant queen (she has won and been stripped of more titles than I have pairs of underwear), and one of our favourite queens of RuPaul's Drag Race season 5, descended on G-A-Y Porn Idol last week with the challenge, "I'm from mother fucking Texas where everything is big, so don't fucking disappoint me". Sadly very few of the contestants heeded her warning and 20 Fingers' "Don't Want No Short Dick Man" became a bit of an anthem for the night. But all that aside and, as fellow judges Mary Mac and Baga Chipz often comment, it's more about the confidence and showmanship than the junk, the 8 wannabes and 2 audience volunteers duly strutted their stuff, swung on the pole and dropped their Primark panties in a bid to win the judge's approval and the £100. Mistress Alyssa, in her best lace up dominatrix attire passed comment, "It's fucking Thursday and he's buck ass naked, he deserves an 8" and stomped over prostrate males on the floor, but it was the eventual winner Courtney that caused her to utter, "Now I've been to some places and seen some things but this is the best mutherfuckin' thing I have seen in my whole career". And for her part Courtney was a sexy trans woman who worked the stage and slipped off her skin tight dress to reveal everything and more causing an audience eruption and the longest ovation we have seen. A worthy winner and a magnificent figure of womanhood. Courtney rocked.

My, my, is it time for more Meat? We thought we were feeling a little peckish! The delicious male pin-up mag returned to the Tavern to celebrate the release of yet another, thick, juicy tome, filled with tasty treats. East London fit-bit DJ Michael Kelly (on Douche Bag day-release) joined the Meat Boys in a buffet of beefy tunes for the Tavern dance floor. Once everyone has been brought to a simmering boil though, mostest hostess Harry Clayton-Wright took the stage to introduce some of the men of Meat. But not without a few more flashes of flesh! Gleeful Harry got the boys to show us the goods and even threatened them at watergun-point until he got what he wanted. Elsewhere the gorgeous Ollywood manned the Meat merch table, tempting us with an array of hot t-shirts, prints and well, just himself generally. To say we gorged ourselves on hot boys, fit tunes, and thick chunks of fun would be an understatement. We practically needed our stomachs pumped. Thank you Meat!

Words by Anthony Gilet

When we hear 'The Big Bang' we can't help but think 'Theory'... But if you think this event had anything to do with geeks and astronomy, you were seriously mistaken. Yes, Alex Han's Big Bang was a far cry from anything to do with Science – apart from the chemistry building up between the buff bodies packed into Bank Space; a stylish, underground raver's dream. Honestly, we'd pick physiques over physics any day, anyway. Big Bang certainly had more braun than brain – well, it's not like we were sifting through that hot crowd for a big... IQ, is it? And when we say 'hot', we mean it. You could fry bacon off the sweaty pecs we were sandwiched between. Not to mention more scene queens than you can shake a home testing kit at. With sexy sounds from Borja Pena and Paul Heron, the night was sure to go down a treat. So 'Big Bang' was totally apt; an explosion of hot boys, hot messes and mind-blowing music (hey, at least something got blown). Bang! Is back at Rolling Stock in Shoreditch this Friday, get your ass over there!

We certainly weren't functional the morning after The Funktion. The Basement Boyz took over Dalston Superstore for a salaciously sweaty Saturday night and I had some stomach-slammingly gorgeous tequila. Tequila is great, because you end up meeting a muscle-bound East European man called Jemmo and getting off with them in the laser-basement, then getting off with them some more on the N55. That didn't happen to ME, it happened to a friend, who told me in great detail. Cough. Another nice thing about the lazer basement was DJ Chris Camplin, who as we've said before, looks like some sinfully hot hybrid of the Scotts porridge oats man and a living Tom of Finland illustration. Lewis G Burton was there too, swishing around in some divertingly bodacious fashion creation. Of course the stars were Amsterdam legends Fierce Ruling Diva, who tore up the joint with their awesome sonorous skills and of course, the man of the hour, Fredi Dimanche. You gave us everything we could want from a party and MORE. It was so good I had to have another tequila! Thanks to both the Basement Boyz and the boys at D-Swiss (that's my new name for Dalston Superstore), for a great night. Cheers! Licks salt, bites lime

Words by James Egan

The original X-Factor success story returned to the hallowed home of pop music with fire under her feet, both literally (it's her new single) and figuratively. The London-born chanteuse appeared to have a renewed energy and passion for her newest project, which heated up the room on a humid Saturday night. Luckily, Leona was prepared, clad in a cheeky pink peekaboo raincoat and brandishing pink water pistols, she cooled off the crowd and a few jets of water, before turning the gun on herself! And of course, she gave us those vocals, flanked by two hunky dancers she belted out her new stomper of a single, tambourine in hand, as well as giving us a rendition of her timeless blockbuster hit 'Bleeding Love'. Not too bad for a girl from Islington eh? We love you Leona!

Two Brewers

114 Clapham High Street, SW4 7UJ

On Sunday 21st of June, our favourite venue named after a couple of beer making delights, Two Brewers, will be hosting the Pride in London Arts Festival Launch party! They've got a lineup that would make even Heather Small proud, including Vanity Von Glow, Mzz Kimberley, Oggie, Sadie Sinner and loads more! It's all hosted by Vigin Xtravaganzah (pictured) and Michael Twaits. Plus ticket holders get free entry for a screening of The Pride at Clapham Picture house! Very artsy-fartsy, dear.

Halfway To Heaven

7 Duncannon Street, WC2N 4JF

Fresh from stumbling through the bushes on Hampstead Heath, that saucy salacious siren Sandra (pictured) will be stalking into Halfway To Heaven on Friday 19th of June, all high heels, hoop earrings and foul mouth. Grab a drink and duck behind a booth if you want to avoid her rapacious wrath. Along with her there's DJ Little John spinning chart hits til' the early hours

City of Quebec

12 Old Quebec Street, London W1H 7AF

Drag Queen of London and Supreme Fabulette, Vicki Vivacious (pictured) will be bringing her own special brand of frothy fun to the finest tavern town named after a Canadian State. Join old Vick on an escapade of serenades from 9pm on Sunday 21st June.

White Swan

556 Commercial Road, E14 7JD

Asian sensation Lady Imelda (pictured) lends her razor-sharp wit and stunning vocals to the White Swan this Friday 19th June. Honestly, she makes Miss Saigon look like Britney's 2007 VMA performance. Then on Saturday 20th Scotch wench Nancy Clench will grip you tightly and squeeze until you scream. Well. Probably. If you pay her.

Ku Bar

30 Lisle Street, WC2H 7BA

What's on at Ku Bar? We'll TELL you what's on at Ku Bar. Pop hits, delicious drinks, and barmen so hot they don't even have to braise the orange slices for your cosmopolitans...they just LOOK at them. On Fridays it's DJ Rodrigo and his pals serving up commercial stompers with a generous slice of sexy.

Hippodrome

Cranbourn Street, Leicester Square, WC2H 7JH, Tickets £15.

There's corsets! There's sequins! Bunny ears and bustiers! Burlesque troupe the Folly Mixtures (pictured) bring all that and more to the Hippodrome on Friday June 19th. It's all just a bit of cheeky fun, and there was never any harm in that, was there? Well, that's what Lindsay Lohan told us anyway.

Central Station

37 Wharfdale Road, Kings Cross, N1

Drag with No Name (pictured) has given up the search for her missing birth certificate (last seen during the Crimean War) and just decided to go with stealing other people's identities. This Saturday 20th at Central Station, you can see her take on Gaga, Britney, Jessie J and, er, Susan Boyle. Won't need to bother shaving this week then, will she? SORRY SOOZ.

The Stable

29 Endell Street, London WC2H 9BA

If you're feeling like you're ready for the knackers yard, then you deserve a trip to the Stable. Like a pony, someone will happily rub you down, give you something to drink and even feed you. So get your trotters up, relax for a bit and maybe find yourself a nice stallion in the process.

We arrived at Central Station and had the chance to grab some of Mister Dave Lynn's fabulous time and company upstairs, before he graced the stage. After a quick chinwag and gossip about the old days, the amount of Prides that are going on this year and which supermarket would be first in line to hold a Pride event (my bets are on ASDA) the QX posse headed downstairs to mingle, have a sherry, take some pics, and partake in the frivolity on offer. We even managed a quick game of pool, before our host Jason Prince announced the entrance of Miss Lynn to the stage, ready to wow, abuse and utterly entertain a mixed crowd of bears, twinks, lesbians and all manner of other homos, as she does so well. Always a pleasure catching up with you Dave! You're a diamond!

It's really great going into the heart of the East End and meeting nice people having fun down at their local. Manager John greeted us warmly as we arrived and the delightful Mandy Gap homed in on the QX contingent the second we got close to the stage. Gotta love being picked on by La Gap, warms your cock...les. The crowd was very mixed, from young, sexy lads to the (equally sexy) diehard old timers, all having a ball. Mandy was on top form and no one was safe from her razor sharp tongue, with many were on the receiving end of a witty barb. This was a special night for the Ship, as it was a charity fundraiser for the local hospice, St Joseph's. Raffle tickets were being sold off with the chance to win some fantastic prizes. Also performing tonight were Ms Dusty Springs, and having her debut at the ship, the tall and sleek miss Jessica who shared the stage with Mandy. Alas, it all went to quickly and but lots of laughs were had, before we headed off on our rounds of the town. And as London Underground would say, "Mind the Gap!"

#JULIASAYS...

by Princess Julia

You might think we like to stick to the East End square mile and you might not be far off the mark! This week we venture towards South London for Chariza (Atterbury Street, Westminster, SW1P), which is a gallery committed to working with unrepresented artists. They're starting their summer program on Friday 19th 'til 27th June with new works from artists including Jenkin Van Zyl who is one of our faves. A list of events is planned including queer punk bands such as Teenage Caveman on the 20th, readings from Polyester magazine on the 24th June and a set of workshops entitled Intellectual Sex Party on Friday 26th June. www.chariza.co.uk

Jenkin Van Zyl

Back to familiar territory and let's all pile into Dalston Superstore (117 Kingsland High Street, E8 2PB) for Les Poppeurs on Friday 19th where special guest DJ's from Athens Bad Spencer and Partok from Tel Aviv are joining Nic Fischer, Rachael, Whitney Weiss and Jamie Bull. On Saturday 20th Superstore has more treats lined up with Lazertitz and a flying visit from New Yorkers Lauren Flax and The Carry Nation joining Hannah Holland downstairs. In the bar Chance + Dark, Cathal and Bica!

We love this little monthly happening at the Mascara Bar up at 72 Stamford Hill (N16 6XS). Queer is a new-wave, punk, rock'n'roll night for those of us who live on the edge. From 9pm 'til 3am join DJ Jo Bunny from Bar Whatever, along with Paul Michael Bowden and Sam Fenn. P.s. It's free to get in ;)

Book in early for this one girls and boys... Lotus Eaterz' Disco at Vogue Fabrics (66 Stoke Newington Road, N16 7XB) on Friday 26th June. Join the most glamorous line up of super fabulous DJs on the eastside, Claire Barrow, Owen Pratt, DJ Bloodbath aka Susu Laroche, Simba Von Reinhold plus Angel Rose and Lula Fortune making their debut! #MyKindOfParty!

GILÉT'S PLAYS

By Anthony Gilét

So, Leona Lewis is staging comeback. The only problem is, when this happens, people are supposed to be, well, aware of it. To say her debut is lackluster puts it lightly. 'Fire Under My Feet' is about as enjoyable as fire in my urethra. She's clearly going for a 'feel good' it-doesn't-matter-if-you're-ugly-or-fat-or-poor vibe that was achieved by Katy Perry's 'Firework' and Sugababes 'Ugly'. But all the misfits in the world would still leave this one as memorable as her personality. Shame, it's just missing that...um, X-Factor.

Old yeller Madge and her eternally plump face return for 'Bitch! I'm Madonna'. You know, just in case you thought she was Ke$ha's younger sister. From the 10-second teaser she left on her Instagram, the video looks to give Miley's 'We Can't Stop' a run for it's trashy-art money. There's also rumours that she's gathered the industry's richest bitches to star: Nicki, Bey and Rita Ora. So basically she shoved all of Tidal's backers into a penthouse. The track is fun and much younger than she is – and it certainly can't do any worse than 'Ghost Town' charting at 116.

X-Factor finalist Ella Henderson has reared her head after whatever that awful last single was called, now teaming up with Sigma. We love a big-name collaboration, even if she has sold her soul to commercial dance. Still though, she's definitely got the lungs big enough to hit those notes. Much like her hair, it's nothing dreadful but nothing amazing. If she plans on making this genre work for her, she needs beats as catchy as 'Ghost'. Don't disappoint, Ella! But hey, what next, Adele and David Guetta?

Film of the week

MR HOLMES (PG)

Ian McKellen plays an ageing Sherlock Holmes in this involving but undercooked mystery. We meet him at 93 in late 1940s Sussex, where he's keeping bees and obsessing about his final unsolved case. There are flashbacks, mysteries and worries of encroaching dementia to keep him busy. Even without more mental fireworks in the plot, McKellen's textured performance makes this unmissable. Plus fine support from Laura Linney.

IN THE WORKS

Jack Reynor and Sam Riley lead the ensemble thriller Free Fire, by British arthouse genius Ben Wheatley (Sightseers). It's about a gun deal that goes wrong. • And Idris Elba (pictured) will have an adventure in The Alchemist, about a hunt for treasure in the Egyptian pyramids.

It's been 15 years since dinosaurs roared across the screen, and in JURASSIC WORLD they're accompanied by none other than Chris Pratt looking very fit indeed. If you haven't seen it already, what are you waiting for?

RUNNING WILD

The boys are back in ENTOURAGE, based on quite possibly the most heterosexual show in TV history. This movie is more of the same: snappy, smart and so manly it hurts. • The French drama LES COMBATTANTS follows two disaffected teens who impulsively join the military to escape their dull lives. Loose and intriguing.

Vod of the week

LORD MONTAGU (12)

This rather earnest documentary tells the fascinating story of Lord Edward, whose arrest on gay sex charges in 1953 caused an uproar in the establishment. He then reinvented himself as Britain's foremost car collector, creating the National Motor Museum at his family home in Beaulieu and becoming the first chair of English Heritage. His sexuality is sidelined by this film, but then that's the point. (Gravitas)

Getting Kinky with Franco

QX finally get round to taking a look at last year's BDSM documentary, Kink, produced by James Franco.

The idea of James Franco being involved in a movie about BDSM is one that would normally fill us (and his agent) with fear. Luckily (or unluckily if you're hot-for-Franco) he decided to stay on the other side of the lens, fulfilling the role of producer with his documentary, Kink. And it's actually quite good.

Directed by Christina Voros, the documentary premiered at the Sundance Film Festival in 2013 and tracks various figures in the San Francisco BDSM movement, delving deep into the world of Kink.com, the largest producer of BDSM content on the Internet.

"I'm down for anything", says one of the porn stars, when being interviewed about his limits (or lack of). It sets the tone of the film. There's plenty of whipping, shocking, fuck machines, nipple clamps, bondage, more flogging and yes, lots and lots of screaming. But as well as all the kinky sex, the documentary is actually an endearing look behind the scenes of an often-maligned movement. As stated in the film: if the porn industry were a high school, the BDSMers would be the Goth kids. Kink tastefully looks at why.

The documentary is packed with fascinating aspects of the BDSM lifestyle that most viewers would never have considered. Watching directors carefully and considerably orchestrate the simulated abuse of their co-workers is a surreal experience, while there's plenty of insightful thoughts about the world of bondage from those involved in putting the films together. Viewers are even shown the correct way to dramatically stamp on a cock without causing any long-term damage.

As Tomcat, one of the interviewed directors, says the BDSM movement is often grossly misunderstood. In Kink, Voros and Franco strive to give it a face, one that's not clad in a leather mask. They've helped demystify the scene with an honest portrayal of the culture and endearing look at those who make the magic happen. A look behind the curtains might mar the illusion for some, but for most Kink will offer a fascinating supplement to their knowledge of the BDSM lifestyle.

Kink* is out on the 15th June.

#Outcome

QX Magazine chats to photographer Tom Dingley about his upcoming photographic portrait exhibition of LGBT people at the Pride Arts festival.

Hey Tom, tell me about #outcome. What is it and what were you hoping to achieve with this project?

I wanted to shine a light for anyone who's yet to come out and daunted by the prospect. My portraits show there is a life out of the closet and you can be who you want to be. I'm not attempting to sugar-coat the coming out process because it can be tough, but there is a happy life past that. #Outcome is a visual representation of the widely used 'it gets better' mantra. I want to encourage people to live their life and know they are not alone. All of us in the LGBT community have been there.

How long have you been working on it?

The first test shoot was in spring 2014, so the project is a year old roughly, but I've had other work on the go at the same time. So I've done a little here and a little there steadily over the past year. I've photographed 50 people to date, mostly found through social media - mainly Twitter - but also Arts Jobs listings and Facebook. Lately word of mouth has been useful.

Tell me about some of the responses you've had from #Outcome already?

From people I've photographed, all have been pleased to be part of a positive project, some have been happy to take part even though they're not used to being photographed or even like having their photo taken. It's the concept they're keen on.

I had a lovely comment from an elderly lady who said: 'it's just love, isn't it, whoever you are.' I've also had the reaction that a project like this - and other similar projects - would have been beneficial to people when they were growing up, to not feel alone.

So will this be your first time exhibiting something at Pride?

Yes, this is my first time in Pride exhibiting. I was part of a group exhibition last year at Brighton but I wanted - and knew - #Outcome deserved its own exhibition. It's been great working with Pride in London and New Bloomsbury Set to get this exhibition in place. I'm really looking forward to it launching on Monday 22nd June from 6pm.

What do you want people to take away from it?

I want the audience to take away a sense that 'being gay' isn't 'being different' and we can all lead successful and happy lives as an out adult.

"My portraits show there is a life out of the closet and you can be who you want to be."

So do you plan on keeping the project going after Pride?

I plan to keep adding to my project. I have 50 portraits in this current exhibition and will be adding to this in time for my exhibition at Brighton Pride in the Jubilee Library from July 17th. I want to get to 100 portraits before I start to think of a book. I want to take the exhibition to schools and colleges and have a visual presentation similar to equality talks and combating homophobia in schools.

Hi Dr Alex,
 It's my boyfriend's birthday at the weekend and I am pretty sure I have a sty. Well, it's a spot on the edge of my eyelid anyway. It's getting quite big and looks awful. Is there anything I can do to get rid of it by the weekend? We have a family dinner on one night and then a BBQ planned for the Sunday. I'm going to look a mess! I guess for the BBQ at least I can hide behind sunglasses...

The medical name for a sty is hordeolum and they are, unfortunately, a very common eyelid infection. The most common is called an external sty and is along the edge of the eyelid. It's caused by an infection in the root of an eyelash. It may start off as a small red lump but as it develops into a collection of pus it will look like a yellow pus-filled spot.

The other type of sty is an internal styewhich is an infection of one of the glands that line the inner surface of the eyelid, against the eyeball. It sounds as though you have an external sty.

They develop quite quickly, over a few days and don't last too long. Unfortunately there is no real treatment for them. Antibiotic ointments and antibiotic medicines are not at all useful unfortunately, so you need to let nature take its course.

What you want to see happen, and in your case ideally very soon, is that a head will form on the sty. Once you see a head then most burst within 3-4 days, and the tiny amount of pus drains away leaving no further problem. To help draw the pus to a head you should use hot compresses. Hold a clean flannel that has been in hot (not scalding!) water, gently but firmly against the closed eye. Do this for 5-10 minutes, to involve the whole eyelid and you might not be able to open the eye, experience a lot of pain and a develop fever. Clearly if this starts to happen get yourself along to Accident and Emergency – birthday or no birthday!

3-4 times a day. The only other thing you can do for an external sty is to pluck out the eyelash that you may see going right through the centre of the sty. This is a bit uncomfortable - well, more than a bit to be honest - but it can help the infection from the hair follicle to drain away. Very, very rarely the infection can spread

To reduce the chance of the infection spreading don't share facecloths, flannels or towels with anyone whilst you have a sty and remember to wash your hands after touching the affected eyelid. You don't want to spread the infection to the birthday boy! Don't let your sty ruin the weekend; they are common, harmless and just a nuisance.
